

RUNE GUNERIUSSEN

b. 1977 Norway

Rune Guneriusen is an artist working in the transition between installation and photography. As a conceptual artist he works site specific, primarily in nature. His work with objects started in 2005 and has been photographed on locations all over Norway.

It is not as much photography as it is about sculpture and installation. The long one-man work on a largescale installation is a process triggering the artistic genome. This process involves the object, story, space and most important the time it is made within. It is an approach to the balance between nature and human culture, and all the sublevels of our own existence. The work is made solely on site, and the photographs represents the reality of the installation itself.

As an artist he believes strongly that art itself should be questioning and bewildering as opposed to patronizing and restricting. As opposed to the current fashion he does not want to dictate a way to the understanding of his art, but rather indicate a path to understanding a story.
